My Mission on This Planet

Every year, many scientists are trying to understand the nature of human existence. People have been studying this issue for centuries, but still have no clear answer. However, each of us can imagine his or her mission, depending on the goals and desires of one's life. Awareness of this mission is the most powerful tool for personal motivation. Specific goals may change over time, but the overall orientation or direction of the movement remains unchanged. Thus, the mission of every person on the planet is his or her personal goal to do something throughout life.

The most significant events in the course of the existence of humanity are those actions that allowed the entire planet to evolve. For example, essential discoveries in space, technological development, and achievements in medicine allowed people to move forward. Every person is a part of a certain society, which is formed due to the accomplishments of specific individuals. Thus, the mission of each of us is partly to improve the world. The realization of the potential of the world and its gradual transformation into a productive community may be the noblest mission of all humankind.

However, people are individual beings who live in society that have personal interests. It is desirable that the wording of your mission statement should consist of no more than 140 characters. Thus, each of us will have to clarify what we bring to this world, as well as have a universal answer when meeting new people. Personal interest in shaping a mission on this planet can be about fame and popularity. Rejecting all the social vices or psychological aspects of my role in society, I believe that my mission is to create a better life for my descendants and become responsible for their future. Thus, all my attempts within my studies, work, and social activity have a clear goal.

The mission of individual realization through an indirect influence on social development allows me to build a life based on the principle of active and productive participation. I believe that world problems such as global warming, military conflicts, and hunger can be solved by each of us. The selfish ideas that are born in us are the beginning of the formation of global thinking. However, whether this thinking leads to something positive or negative is not clear. Every person has the potential to manage global aspects, influencing tendencies, and forming activities or, conversely, doing nothing. I believe that the possibility of improving the world depends on everyone on the planet. Thus, my actions can lead to development or decline. My mission is completely consonant with this view of life. Moreover, I want to spread this idea and show that everyone can have the same mission on the planet.

Lastly, all earthly desires are projections of global influence. Each person can formulate a mission from the perspective of surrounding problems. Moreover, such a position will allow the planet to evolve and not decay. My mission on the planet is its continuous development so that the next generation is even more intelligent and educated, achieves its goals, and does not harm the environment, and lives with moral principles of social cohabitation. If each of us forms similar goals in life, the mission of life on this planet will unite in one desire to improve the world.
